review the credit facilities granted to all the November, 1984 riot affected borrowers and extend such reliefs as may be considered reasonable on the merits of each case. The reliefs may include further extension of time for repayment of dues, entering into compromise arrangements and, in cases where there are no reasonable chances of recovery of dues, write off of the amount.

As a measure of providing further relief, Government had decided in April, 1990 that in deserving cases, the banks may charge interest at 6% per annum on loans extended to November, 1984 riot affected borrowers. The difference of interest charged by the banks and 6% will be met by the Central Government as interest subsidy to banks through RBI. Accordingly, RBI prepared an interest relief scheme known as "Central Interest Subsidy Scheme for November, 1984 Riot Affected Borrowers" and circulated it to all the commercial banks in September, 1990 for implementation.

Government have been receiving representations from various quarters demanding further concessions on loans granted to November, 1984 riot affected borrowers. Therefore, Government have constituted a Committee of Officers in April, 1992 to review the grant of facilities in respect of November, 1984 riot affected borrowers.
